CALL FOR ABSTRACTS - Vol. 6(1)/2021

SPECIAL ISSUE ON

Interaction and Exchanges between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic

Editors: Giuseppe D'Angelo & Erminio Fonzo, University of Salerno (Italy)

Deadline for abstract submission: 30 June 2020

Identity and features of the Mediterranean are also formed by its relations with other continents. Since the last decade of the XV century, the Americas have been an essential partner of the Mediterranean countries, at all levels. After a stage of European domination over the «new continent», the two areas have continuously interacted and such an interaction has contributed to the nation building of both European and American countries. Over the centuries, also the Southern shore of the Mediterranean – North Africa and Middle East – has had close relations with the Americas. Today, the exchanges between the Mediterranean Basin and the «new continent» are continuous and intense, involving all the areas of the human activity.

The Vol. 6(1) of the Journal of Mediterranean Knowledge aims at exploring the relations between the Mediterranean and the American continent, both northern and southern, with a multidisciplinary approach. Contributions by historians, sociologists, anthropologists, scholars of literature, philosophers and other social scientists are welcomed.

Articles are expected to address several topics, proposing either case-studies or general analysis:

- Migrations, role of immigrant communities and citizens of foreign descent;
- Cultural exchanges, including not only “high culture”, such as art and literature, but also ways of life, religion, sport;
- Influences on politics;
- Economic relations and trade;
- American perception of the Mediterranean events;
- Diplomatic relations between Mediterranean and American countries.

All topics can be examined either in historical perspective or in reference to the present world.
