CALL FOR ABSTRACTS - Vol. 7(1)/2022

SPECIAL ISSUE ON

Human and Social Sciences faced with the Covid-19 pandemic

Deadline for submission of abstracts: 15 November 2021

The Mediterranean world has today to face new challenges. Along with the issues arisen in the past decades – migration from the Southern to the Northern shore, relations among peoples and civilizations living in the Basin, role of the European Union and relations with North-Africa and Middle East, Arab-Israeli conflict and its international repercussions, terrorism, growth of populism and xenophobia – the Covid-19 pandemic has imposed to restructure social relations, economy, international relations and political action.

In this context, human and social sciences are called to question these new issues: historians, sociologists, anthropologists, economists, jurists, scholars of literature, have to provide tools of knowledge to analyse the situation and the ongoing changes, to manage the emergency and to establish development plans.

The next issue of the “Journal of Mediterranean Knowledge” will focus on the role of Human and Social Sciences in the current pandemic. Papers can include case studies, examining the contribution of Human and Social Sciences to questions connected to the pandemic; general reflections, for example the role of an individual discipline in the present emergency; analysis of the state of the art of individual disciplines on specific issues. Contributions of local nature, for example about the work of individual scholars and research groups, and presentation of studies (both in progress and completed) are also welcomed, so long as they are connected to the role of Human and Social Sciences in the current pandemic.
